

War Is Tough on Families

Military life has enough challenges without worrying about how your family will contact you in an emergency... especially in times of conflict. I know because I grew up in a military family.

That's why the American Red Cross is in nearly a thousand U.S. communities and at military installations worldwide. If your family needs to reach you in an emergency, the American Red Cross will be there. They were there for my family, and were there for nearly half a million military families last year.

Whether you're at sea, in Afghanistan or at more than one hundred bases around the world, the Red Cross is there to serve. We're also with your family back home, when there's a disaster or when someone needs blood.

We need your help, too. Please designate the American Red Cross (#0700) in the Combined Federal Campaign today. Because together, we can save a life.

Marsha J. "Marty" Evans
President and CEO, American Red Cross
Rear Admiral, USN (Ret.)
